The chance to lose is underestimated by most people. was already formulated by the moral philosopher and famous economist Adam Smith in his book Wealth of Nations in 1776. Two centuries later the behavioural economist Daniel Kahneman confirmed the notion that in situations with uncertainty people are inclined to biased decision-making. Actual tests of the CAPM on stock data confirmed that the market premium as a single factor may be insufficient to explain stock returns completely. Stambough (1982) among many others found a positive relation between beta and average return, however, it was too flat and the intercept was greater than a risk-free bond¹. Other effects were observed that could not be explained by the market premium alone; these anomalies such as the size factor², book-to-market (BTM) factor³ and momentum factor⁴ among others led to the development of more extensive models. These models were in some respects more...
