With such encouragement, then, I continue my humble attempts to predict the character of the seasons with a much lighter heart than heretofore, feeling assured that I am not singular in my estimation of the work, and that I may look for encouragement, assistance, and support to many of the leading men of the country, and, more encouraging stiH, to the people as a whole. That all misrepresentation has been silenced and all opposition overcome I do not belreve, and evil would be the day when meteorological investigations should be considered of such little importance as to he counted unworthy of opposition. I cannot conclude this brief preface without, in justice to myself, repeating in effect what I always have endeavored to make plain to my readers: I lay no claim to the discovery of an infallible system of foretelling weather. The science of practical meteorology is yet in its infancy, and is lieing studied by many men whose abilities are far greater than any I could endeavor to lay claim to. There will be many mistakes before a right understanding or interpretation of its principles is arrived at. Based, as any system of predictions must be, on records of weather as yet incomplete and very faulty, the results cannot be entirely satisfactory, more especially in respect to new ground; yet I believe the key to the solution of the problem has been found, and that all errors will but...
